MATTHEW 4:20

THIRD SUNDAY IN ORDINARY TIME

GOSPEL REFLECTION

It is hard to explain how the traditional believers, individuals and communities, gradually grow indifferent to their faith and move on to lose it altogether. Shocking as it is, it has happened in a big way in our days. When “people who walked in darkness see a great light,” they have every reason to rejoice. Can the opposite happen? Can one move away from light and rejoice? That is what is happening today.

Blaming those who have strayed is not the issue. What is important is to search for the causes. Were there divisions in the believing community? Were there ego struggles? Had religion become merely confined to the externals? Or could it be that the consumeristic world was too tempting?

Whatever be the cause, an invitation to repentance remains. Jesus comes into our lives and calls for a change of heart. All we need to do is to find passion-free zones of our inner being where God’s love can be heard and received, and help others to do the same. Andrew, Simon, John and James were ordinary people. But they were transformed by the personal attention that gave to them. His call is life transforming. All we need to do is to respond to his call.
